

Bathroom by Brian Patterson Designs

Approximately $30,000

After several years of living in their home, Steve and Jill Edwards decided they would like an upgrade from their small master bedroom and bath. Instead of adding on to the house, however, they decided to take advantage of unused space—with the help of Brian Patterson Designs, they transformed their empty attic into a private master suite. “Every designer we talked to said the space was absolutely perfect for what we wanted to do,” Steve says.

Convenient double doors lead from the bedroom to the bathroom. The peak of the ceiling was filled in to create gently sloping walls, and the window at the end of the house was widened to fill the room with as much light as possible. Since attic spaces tend to be dark, the couple and their designers decided to use as much white as possible, giving the brand new room a bright, fresh appearance. Tiny tiles and a dark rug and table help to add detail to the room.

“We definitely wanted to each have our own sink and to have a full-size shower,” Steve says. The shower takes advantage of a gable in the roof to give it more height, and its own window adds more light to what could be a dark part of the room. A soaking tub helps make the room feel even more like a retreat, and it gets lots of use, too—the couple’s toddler son takes his baths there.

The details in the bathroom make it a true masterpiece. A chandelier adds a beautiful, elegant touch, while a pair of unique mirrors above matching pedestal sinks create a sense of perfect symmetry. “It’s a fun space, so open and bright,” Steve says. “The whole room is great.”

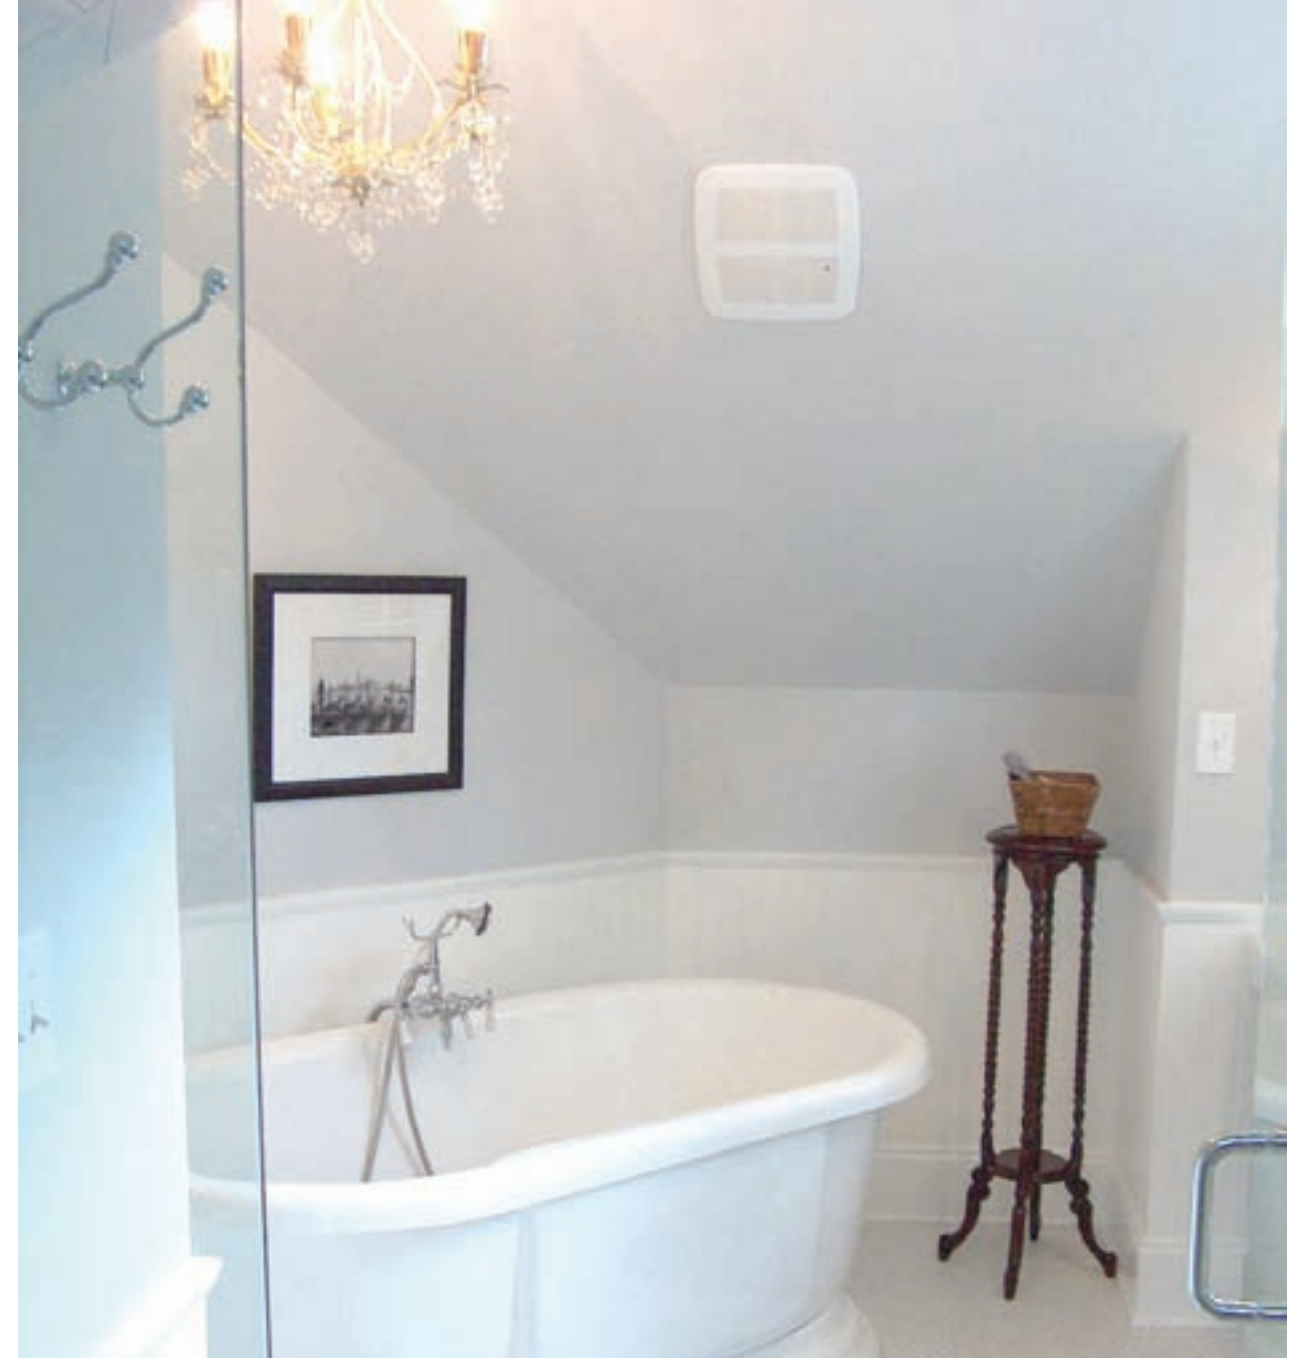

Photos courtesy of Brian Patterson Designs

BEFORE

GOAL:

Transform unused attic space into a spalike escape

FLOOR PLAN

- Floor and wall tile: American Olean
- Bathtub and sinks: Kohler
- Faucets: Jado
- Chandelier: The Big Chandelier
- Sconces: Pottery Barn